NEW YORK, March 14.—Liquidation was of a volume and character to-day such as has not been witnessed on the Stock Exchange since May 9, 1901, when the development of a corner in Northern Pacific precipitated one of the severest stock panics ever seen in the New York market.

The extreme violence of the declines on that occasion was due largely to the feeling of panic that broke in abruptly upon a period of boom and rising prices. To-day's demonstration was radically different in that it succeeded a prolonged period of liquidation and nervous declines in prices.

The sudden and acute outbreak of renewed weakness to-day owed most of its violence to the fact that its dependency in speculative circles regarding the effects of the public agitation against corporations and the new universal ground of legislation measures against them.

The extreme sentiment of sentiment on the subject is founded on suppositions of what the great authorities in the financial world think on the subject. The recent events have created the impression that these authorities are in a condition of keen anxiety and even of fright.
